1 Foreword

There appears to be a relative resurgence concerning interest and motivation for education research, conference participation, and publications from members of staff at the School of Humanities & Social Sciences. This is partly one result of united effort by the School's Research and Publications Committee to put together hands-on data to this vital contribution to the school's productivity. We can see now! It goes without saying that such an effort has long been sidelined, insofar as open representation of yearly productivity of the School is concerned.

In the first seven months of 2022, K227 213.81 was allocated to individual and group research project applications (88.5%), majority of which were new projects, and for conference travel (11.5%). Of this, only four Strands within the school benefited. An additional K34 000 was awarded to various individual graduate students, mainly of the BA Honours level. However, none of these awards were accessed, as the present University's research policy dubiously excludes independent research applications from temporary staff and graduates. This aspect of the policy needs an immediate review if the University is to cultivate and realize the full potential of future researchers and respond with passion to the institution's vision.

In 2022, the Research and Publication Committee has so far awarded approximately K581 551.18 for individual and group research projects (85.2%) and conference attendances (14.7%). A few of those awards have been either rejected, or tentatively granted subject to clarification of details. As is shown in the matrices contained in this brief report, more Strands are becoming involved, which has led to the total amount of just over a half a million kina being awarded.

It is the primary function of the Committee to ensure that this vital aspect of the School's productivity. Therefore, its academic profile is adequately represented to the society. I am happy to say that, through this reporting mechanism, which has been passionately supported by, the Executive Dean Professor Leo Marai, Deputy Dean (Planning), Dr Philemon Yalamu, and the committee's Vice Chairperson, Russel Yangin. This committee is able to tell a story of what the School also does and CAN do over and above teaching and learning activities.

The Research and Publication Committee still needs to include other related efforts. Not every publication from staff member's since 2021 is represented. However, we shall aim to improve, and include efforts by providing vital advisory roles to government departments, other organisation and society as whole. There are also crucial gap deemed as "light publications" in the dailies and related media, which feature as columns, blogs and the like. Irrespective, serious thought has been expended to think through the fine lines that are published.

I hope this little effort helps us face productivity at the School in perspective, and under so many other circumstances.
